Sentry - GDPR Made Easier

As Further Education institutions continue to consolidate, the scale of the data protection challenge is growing too. With departments split across campuses, each with different historical processes, getting a consistent approach can be difficult.

The Sentry system provides a consistent structure for data mapping, recording breaches and subject access requests and documenting audits and impact assessments. The inbuilt training means that all staff will have a common base of knowledge about their data protection responsibilities.

Sentry - safe and secure

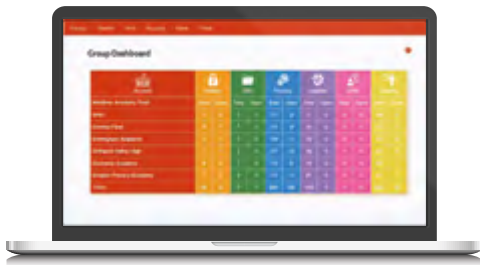

Sentry was designed to make GDPR compliance easier. It was also created to be secure.

Your data is hosted on Microsoft Azure servers in the UK and your records are isolated from other customers.

We use Microsoft's secure password management system meaning we never store your credentials.

Sentry for Further Education

Providers in Further Education have to deal with the most diverse set of students. Some students may be as young as 14 years old and then range up to adult learners. In addition the courses range from short courses through to foundation degrees. Add to that, operations that may be spread across a number of campuses and data protection can be complex to manage.

The critical thing is to recognise the complexity but not be overwhelmed by it. The compliance challenges are similar to other settings, but structures and processes need to be managed tightly.

Sentry to protect your organisation

If you have a failure in your data protection and a data subject suffers due to it, the ICO may determine you're at fault. You may not get fined, but legal action can be brought directly against your institution.

Sentry gives you the tools to ensure you have:

- Checked your compliance against the ICO's own checklists
- Provided essential training to all your staff
- Documentation to show how you manage personal data

With Sentry on your side, managing your GDPR responsibilities can be straightforward.
