Sentry - GDPR Made Easier

Institutions in Higher Education have to deal with the personal data for large numbers of students and staff, but in addition may be collating and using a wide range of other information from data subjects outside of the organisation.

Research projects may involve peers in other institutions, or companies, as well as potentially experimental subjects. The institution is responsible for ensuring that this data is managed properly. Members of staff need to be fully aware of their responsibilities and that the data being processed must be properly recorded.

Sentry - safe and secure

Sentry was designed to make GDPR compliance easier. It was also created to be secure.

Your data is hosted on Microsoft Azure servers in the UK and your records are isolated from other customers.

We use Microsoft's secure password management system meaning we never store your credentials.

Sentry for Higher Education

While the students in Higher Education are no longer classed as vulnerable the data protection issues are no less complex. Recent discussions have focussed on the role of parents in supporting students, showing that difficult decisions about disclosure will have to be made.

The delivery of education requires a constant flow of personal data which must be mapped and risk managed. With large numbers of staff Higher Education institutions must be alert for subject access requests and breach events to ensure that they are recognised and dealt with effectively.

Sentry to protect your organisation

If you have a failure in your data protection and a data subject suffers due to it, the ICO may determine you're at fault. You may not get fined, but legal action may be brought directly against you.

Sentry gives you the tools to ensure you have:

- Checked your compliance against the ICO's own checklists
- Provided essential training to all your staff
- Documentation to show how you manage personal data

With Sentry on your side, managing your GDPR responsibilities can be straightforward, reducing the risk of regulatory action and claims for compensation.
